BANTA.

HIS CHARACTER STILL UNDER OFFICIAL INVESTIGATION.

Witnesses Who Testify to Having Business Transactions With Him and That He Was Shrewd Enough for All Practical Purposes, Though Undoubtedly a Drinker.

Interest continues to grow in the Banta will case as the testimony comes in. Yesterday several more witnesses were examined for the defense. A great many reputable citizens of Pasadena have testified that the late Isaac Banta was a drunkard and insane, and now a great many more reputable witnesses are testifying that he was a sober man and long-headed instead of mentally weak. Between the two armies it will be somewhat difficult for the jury to choose.

The first witness yesterday was Sherman Washburn. He testified that he has resided in Pasadena for 15 years, and knew Isaac Banta well. He first met him in Los Angeles and was introduced to him by William Pierce, his son-in-law. The witness transacted some insurance business for him, and shortly afterwards Mr. Banta went east. In 1883 or 1884 Mr. Banta came into his office to see about taking stock in a house. He offered to take $25,000. The witness sold him some lots in Alosta, and was paid by checks. The witness then detailed a number of business transactions with Mr. Banta, and said that from them he should judge him to be perfectly rational and an exceedingly shrewd business man—one of the shrewdest he ever did business with.

On cross-examination he said that Mr. Pierce called his attention to the checks shortly before the case came on trial. He had heard Banta speak of Pierce on an unmerciful way, but could not give the date of the conversation, and only remembered that it was in Los Angeles.

John B. Yocom was examined and testified as follows: I reside in West Pasadena, and knew the late Mr. Banta about four years. I met him frequently, both in business and in a social way. I looked more to him than any of my acquaintances, because we had both worked hard, our lives having been similar in many ways. I used to see him frequently, and opened a real-estate office in his house. He was often under the influence of liquor. In the fall of 1887 he had business transactions with him concerning a water-enterprise, but he paid me off. He was always Banta, and you could go just so far with him and no further.

I advised him in 1887 or January, 1888, about my son, and the best course to pursue. He gave me good advice. His mind appeared perfectly sane. He was getting to be an old man and was feeble.

The witness was cross-examined closely by Mr. Metcalf. He said: I am not known as Parson Yocom. Sometimes I am called Prof. Yocom. I taught school for 30 years. My son was in business with me. I took charge of his business because I was the only son of his father, and an unfortunate son. He was not dishonest, but he was partially insane. Mr. Banta would never enter into my projects. I did not approach him because I thought him easy to handle. He was a man of brains. He had more than I have. I had my office in a hotel four months, and paid for accommodations. I have no recollection of Mrs. Banta turning me out of the house. We were to be there free of charge and solicit for the house. I do not own the estate anything or Mr. Pierce anything. Mr. Banta was in the habit of drinking every day. I think he was under the influence of liquor daily. He had a chronic habit of finding fault with everything that was going on.

John W. Magee was subjected to a lengthy examination. He testified to having had business relations with Mr. Banta in connection with his (Magee's) bank, and also to having negotiated the sale of the Los Angeles Hotel, when it was bought by a syndicate from Mr. and Mrs. Banta. He judged from the acts and manner of Mr. Banta that he was peculiar, but rational. He could not say that he had at the time any thought otherwise than that he was sane.

On cross-examination Mr. Magee testified that there were delays in the consumption of the sale of the hotel property on account of the condition of Mr. Banta. He went to the house and Mrs. Banta told him that Mr. Banta was sick. He thought Banta was a drinking man. Mr. Banta never said in his lifetime anything that led him to believe he did not have implicit confidence in his wife. Mr. Banta always seemed to be in some condition, peculiar. He was infirm. He was a character. If you saw him once the impression left was that he was a character in himself. He was peculiar in his walk, and talk and all that sort of thing. During the latter part of his life the impression of the witness was that he was more or less under the influence of some delusion.

C. M. Terry, sworn: I live in Pasadena, and have lived there two years and a half. I got acquainted with Mr. Banta in 1887. I frequently saw him. I had some little business transactions with him in the fall of 1887. Mr. Banta used to attend the tax sales and bought considerable property in my hands to compromise with him. We had considerable talk about him, and he couldn't see it in that light. He was very close and wanted all he wanted to do by law, and urged me to reorient a little, but he said he bought them to make money and did not care to cut off at all. These conversations were in the fall and winter of 1887, and not later than January, 1888. I never took any thought about his mental condition. I had no impression that anything was the matter with him. I would characterize his acts as rational.

On cross-examination the witness said that he thought the proposition he made to Mr. Banta a reasonable one. He could not say that there was anything unusual in his appearance. One day about two weeks ago Mr. Pierce met the witness and asked him what he thought of his condition. Mr. Pierce had put some tax-receipts in his hands along in the winter of 1887. They were in Mr. Banta's name. He made some inquiries and found he could do nothing, and returned them to Mr. Pierce.

Seth Gliddon had lived in Pasadena since 1885, and became acquainted with Mr. Banta in that year. Up to the last of December, 1887, he saw him quite frequently, and he had in two. He negotiated a loan with Mr. Banta for $5000, in which Banta took a mortgage on certain property. His acts were rational, and the witness had no other impression as to his sanity than that he was like any other business man. He was very slow and cautious. The transaction described was in 1886. In 1887 he saw Banta at the cottage on Union avenue. He went to see the old man about the extension of the note, and Banta told him it was not right, but to go to Pierce, because he was going to let Pierce attend to his business. This was in December, 1887. The thought never entered his head, but that Mr. Banta was a rational man.

On cross-examination the witness stated that the $5000 was still due and part of the interest. The loan was for his son.

The interest is payable semi-annually. The son's name alone is on the note. Pierce had asked the witness about the payment of the interest. He considered Mr. Banta's head as good as his own. He denied that he ever had a conversation with Mrs. Banta in December, 1887, or January, 1888, when he told her that Mr. Pierce would not let him set Mr. Banta, and that he asked Mrs. Pierce if Banta's head was bad. The witness had a conversation with Mr. Getchell after Mr. Banta went east. Mr. Getchell was much interested in Mrs. Banta and said if he (Getchell) should come down and testify, the jury would find Mr. Banta insane without leaving their seats. The witness did not offer an opinion one way or the other. The witness never saw Banta when he thought he was drunk; he should call him a sober man.

George S. Mayhew, who had lived in Pasadena since 1885, knew Mr. Banta. He met him every day while Mr. and Mrs. Banta kept the Los Angeles House. He thought Mr. Banta rational.

This concluded the hearing for the day, and court adjourned until this morning, when the case will be re-sumed.

HERE AND THERE.

Testimony for the defense in the Banta case was heard today from S. Washburn, J. D. Yocom, Judge Magee and Mr. Glidden.

The salary to the recent appointment tendered H. N. Rust is about $1500 per annum.

The Council does not meet until Saturday, when another lively discussion in railroad matters is promised.

Interest in the Banta will case still continues, and the testimony of each witness is closely scrutinized. The records are complete and interesting.

One of the leading questions of the hour is, Who owns the Union market? It has been sold twice or more, but is still doing business.

ANOTHER BEGINNING.

The peaceful quietude of the city was suddenly broken into this afternoon by what almost culminated in a street fight.

The trouble grew out of a conversation between two gentlemen who took strong opposing views in the latter discussion. A drawing by Lebo in the window of the drug store has attracted considerable attention all day long, and has been greatly admired by the friends of prohibition. The man of high license overheard a remark as he passed, and as he thought it was intended for him, he came back to inquire. Hot words were uttered and angry glances exchanged. The timely presence of Officer Robbins ended the war of words, the large crowd dispersing, murmuring because they had been cheated of a fight.
